THE RECENTLY DECLARED PROTEC TORATE OF THE GILBERT ISLANDS.

This Is but the Latest Incident in a Ca reer of Annexation That Has Made Great Britain a Bigger Empire Than Rome Ever Was.

Macaulay gives us an interesting story of the first British settlement in India— how an Englishman, oppressed by an official, traveled to the court of Aurangzeb, the last and greatest of the great moguls, and laying hold on that monarch's bridle rein as he rede out of the palace yard de-manded justice in the name of the common God of the Christian and the Mussulman. Little did either party then dream, adds the historian, that in a coming time the British would rule all his vast domain and dole out a monthly pension to his heir. Yet that has come to pass. About that time (1670-80) England was

About that time (1670-80) England was fairly launched upon her great career of annexation, which has continued with but slight interruptions to this day, and the seizure of the Gilbert islands last May was but the last of scores of such scizures. Once she voluntarily ceded away territory—the lonian islands—to Greece and occu--the Ionian islands—to Greece, and once only has any portion of her vast empire been lost by successful revolution. These cases excepted, her march has been ever onward till she now rules about one-fourth of the earth's surface and one-fifth of the human race. The Roman empire at its greatest had not half so many people as British India, and compared with Britain's domain all the ancient empires of Asia sink into insignificance.

Her lutest acquisition the Gilbert is sink into insignificance.

Her latest acquisition, the Gilbert islands, or Kingswill group, lie just north of the equator and in longitude 173 east—that is, due north of New Zealand and about 2,500 miles by sea from the thickly settled part of Australia. They were discovered by the British Admiral Byron in 1765, and then seemed to consist received to consist received. by the British Admiral Byron in 1765, and then seemed to consist mostly of coral reefs, each island a circular rock, so to speak, inclosing an inner sea bordered by sand hills. But later explorations showed several of the islands to be inhabited, and the total population is now about 25,000. The cocoanut tree is the life of the people; its fruit makes a large part of their food, and from its wood and barkere constructed their boats, clothing, utensils and habitations.

The people are simple, civil and unwar-like, and governed by hereditary kings. Apamama is the principal island, and King Paul is a boy of ten years. Tunbin Oko had been king for many years, when he died in 1891, and was succeeded by his brother Simmon, who soon killed himself by drinking. Both these monarchs were of immense size, weighing over 3:0 pounds each. King Paul succeeded as the son o: Simmon, and there was a relaxation of the rule which gave occasion for interference. On the 27th of May, 1892, Captain Edward II. M. Davis, of the British ship Royalist, planted the British flag on Apamama and read this proclamation: read this proclamation:

Her majesty, Victoria, queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and empress of India, having this day assumed a protectorate over the Gilbert Islands, I remind all residents in the group, other than natives, that it is contrary to law to supply firearms, ammunition, explosive substances or intexteating liquors to any natives of the Gilbert Islands. This is hereby made known for general information.

The flag was then run up and sainted by the marines, and the Royalist fired a salute of twenty-one guns. King Paul stood by, apparently pleased with the spectacle, hold ing his shoes in his hand and digging up the sand with his toes. The captain visited all the inhabited islands and hoisted and proclaimed in each.

The islanders are nominally Christian, and there are English and American missions. The missionaries and a few traders make quite a little society of whites. Many refinements have been introduced, and the "palace" of King Paul is well furnished in the European style. Most of the dwellings are quite substantial structures, raised on stone foundations and thatched with coconaut leaves. How Ney Received His Sentence.
Seventy-seven years ago Ney was shot by a file of soldlers in the garden of the Luxembourg in Paris, after having been convicted of betraying the king by joining his fortunes to Napoleon's on his return from Elba. Upon the very spot where he was executed a statue to his memory was subsequently erected, and this statue has now been removed to another site, the land where it stood laying been taken for railwhere it stood having been taken for rail-

When the charge under which Marshal Ney was tried was issued against him it was left within his power to fly from the country. This he refused to do. The gendarmes came to arrest him. Ney sawthem standing in his courtyard and put up his

He was sentenced, by a formal vote of the house of peers, to be shot. When the announcement of the sentence was brought to him in the Luxembourg prison he was asleep. He was wakened, and the secretary of the house of peers began to read the sentence. Very near the beginning of the document came the list of Ney's titles bestowed noon him by the emperor;

A Little Enthusiasm.

"It is such bad form to become enthusi-

"It is such bad form to become enthusiastic over anything," said one of those icily regular, splendidly mill women who could not get up any animation no matter how hard she might try, and therefore regard the absence of the power to be demonstrative as an indication of superior refinement on their part.

One's true nature will crop out some time, no matter how we try to school it otherwise. Of course the cool, unchanging demeanor of a woman of the world helps her to pass over those embarrassing contretemps that will occur in society, and which so upset the novice in this great school, yet how much more enjoyment does the one derive who can genuinely enthuse over the little happenings of life that the calm and gracious hostess fails to recognize, or if she does unbend as far as that altogether fails to appreciate. If we wait for something truly grand to rouse our dormant powers of enthusiasm we may never once be called upon in an entire lifetime, and will spend our days in a colorless existence, absolutely neutral as regards time, and will spend our days in a colorless existence, absolutely neutral as regards the sensations of pain or joy, but if we only could, with a childish simplicity, enter into all minor pleasures with the wild enthusiasm of youth we would find so much to enjoy and enjoy and enjoy and enjoy and enjoy thusiasm of youth we would find so much to enjoy and so much to appreciate that we would say to ourselves, "What a beautiful world it is!"

When we urge to enthusiasm we by no means commend the restless energy that prompts one to continual action. There can be quite as much enjoyment derived from the quiet perusal of a good book or the contemplation of a glorious sunset as is to be found in much liviler, but no more elevating ways of passing the time.—Philaelevating ways of passing the time.—Philadelphia Times

Had Ponce De Leon, in his search for the "fountain of youth," wended his way to Little Sandy, in Kentucky, and plunged beneath the placid waters of Red spring, he might not have had his days prolonged until now, but most certain it is his color would have been changed to a bright crimson. In my early days Mathews was a true friend to me—yes, and in the later days too. I remember when I first went to the St. James theater. I went as stage man-ager, and there were a lot of old actors ager, and there were a lot of old actors there—among them Frank Matthews and Walter Lacy. I was a young man among these old stagers. I admit to feeling nerv-ous, and was fearful lest I might do something which the older men might resent. The first day came. All went very nicely, and we were just commencing to rehearse "The Belle's Stratagem" when who should skip on the stage but Charles Mathews! Stopping the rehearsal for the moment he rushed up to Frank Matthews and Walter

The Rothschilds own five chateaux at Ferrieres, fifty miles south of Paris, and here they go for a good time in summer, altogether often and as sociable a family as one may find in a long journey. Baron Alphonse's chateau has a famous cellar. Alphonse's chatcau has a lamous cellar, and when Prince Bismarck occupied it without the owner's invitation in 1871, Bismarck knew more about its old vintages than the steward thought. When ordered by the warlike Prussian to produce some of his treasures, this venerable functionary swore there was nothing but vin ordinair in the house. A rope was brought and a noose made and in no time thereafter the rarest Johannisberger Schloss in crystal goblets ten inches high was served to the great Bismarck's delight.—San Francis. The water of this spring looks as clear as crystal and is remarkably cold, much more so than the water of wells in that vicinity. This water is much used at the approach of Easter to color eggs, and a strange thing about it is the difference in color upon articles of different quality or substance. The hair it blondines, colors eggs, ribbons and dress goods a crimson red, the flesh of persons a light blood red. The color is permanent in both cotton and silk goods dyed by the water. The blonding of the hair generally lasts about three weeks, while a person who bathes in its waters is given a coat that lasts about six weeks. Soap applied to any articles dyed by the water but strengthens the intensity of the color.

People for miles around come and carry the water away in bottles, jugs and barrels to use in dying various articles.—Cin
